Aussie rules footy is not rugby, eh

CARMINE BONANNO
Town Crier

Craig Stewart wants to make one thing clear: Australian rules football is not rugby.

Stewart is captain of Toronto Downtown Dingos, a midtown team that plays in the nine-team Ontario Australian Football League.

That's right, Australian rules football — also known as "footy" — exists in Toronto. And when people find out a league does exist, Stewart says, he gets one main reaction.

"Most people say, 'Oh, rugby,'" said Stewart, who came to Canada from Australia in 1998. "But it's a completely different sport: you can run backwards, forward and from side to side."

Stewart added that Australian rules football has been referred to as "aerial ping pong", as the ball is always in the air going back and forth.

"It's like soccer, but with tackling, and you can actually pick up the ball," he said.

The main objective of the game is to score points by kicking a ball through two posts. Players can pick up the ball, run with it, kick it and pass it to teammates, all while avoiding being tackled.

"It's a natural progression in Australia — football in the winter and cricket in the summer," says Dingos player Justin Robertson, who is originally from Melbourne. "It was on television all the time and it was taught in school."

Stewart, who has been on the team since 2000, likens its prominence in GOING TO THE DOGS: Toronto Downtown Dingos Australian rules football team is all business as the squad, in its 11th year of play in the Ontario Australian Football League, is in pursuit of its fifth title. Australian culture to that of hockey in Canada.

"It's just something you did," he said. "I've been playing for 25 years and I can still stand upright."

Footy has been in Canada for a long time. The OAFL was founded in 1989. The Dingos organization was born in 1996, when Mark Jones, a travelling Australian, came up with the idea to create a local team to become the league's eighth squad.

The OAFL's popularity has fluctuated, with the number of teams having jumped from six to 10 before dropping to the current nine. But it appears the league is again on the rise, with teams in London and Ottawa expected to join next year.

"It's a great sport, as it keeps guys fit and active," said Stewart about why footy is popular among the players.

He sees it as an ideal destination for North American football players looking for a recreation league to join after graduating from high school or university.

"They want to keep doing something, so when they learn about us they give it a try," he said. "The new guys like the speed and all the action in the game, and the contact too."

The Dingos and the OAFL in general have had problems recruiting players, however, due in part to a lack of available green space in the city. While smaller parks may be sufficient for practice, a field 180 metres long and 120 metres wide is needed for league games.

There is also rule that limits the number of Australians per team. According to Robertson, a team can have a maximum of 10 Australians on its roster, can only dress eight per game and have no more than five on the field at a time.

With the limits on the number of Australians, the Dingos rely on Canadians to fill up their roster. Both Stewart and Robertson say they would like to recruit more local boys.

"I get a lot of satisfaction from teaching the Canadians our game," said Robertson, who has been on the team for two years. "Not a lot of people know about it, but it is a great game."

The Dingos are 1-1 after their first two games in the 2007 season. They are looking to add a fifth OAFL Premiership to their trophy mantle after winning in 2000, 2003, 2004 and 2005.
